Posted: May 23, 2008 08:10 AM EDT

Police officials, mayors and fire chiefs from across the state rallied at the Capitol to urge lawmakers to deliver on promised funding. They say state promised to help pay for city services such as police protection, roads, water and sewer this year, if local governments gave up their ability to levy local taxes. Those rallying say, for the past six years, the state has broken that promise, slashing over three billion dollars in revenue sharing for local governments.
